It has a unique magic system and different paths that the story can take depending on your in-game choices. The game continues the tradition of the TenyMaku series, known as the Far East of Eden. You play as one of the terrans or aoy, teenage boys and girls, respectively, on a quest to defeat the evils of antiquity It threatens the prosperous lands of Jifang to prove the value of the legendary Fire Clan, which has protected Zifang for generations from evil demons and war demons. The land of Jifang is very similar to medieval Japan and you can visit Mongolia, China and other Asian countries during your adventure. The most important new feature of the game is a nonlinear story. Many missions can be handled in any order, and the story changes depending on the main battle result. Losing against the Boss does not end the game, but reveals the branching story path. Otherwise, the gameplay is similar to other Ten-y Makyou games featuring overworld map travel and first-person perspective, turn-based combat. For the past few months I've been looking for an MMORPG game to satisfy my desire for one, and this game does exactly that. I am very addicted to the story of this game and how players can change their relationship with npcs. There are also graphics. How this game features all the classes, the way they portray, fascinates me. It somewhat showed me that all weapons are unique and powerful in their own way. Usually in mmorpg games I would choose the same class over and over again (warriors / great, but in this game, I feel like I want to do all the things in the class! The whole thing is almost perfect except for one thing: the conversation. Or if others experience this bug, but hopefully it will be fixed. I enjoy the game alone, but I like more if the conversation is coordinated. I love monster hunters on the Wii again that day and this is an almost perfect replica of MH. Collect the materials you use to build better armor and weapons when you hunt solo or other monsters in the party. The combat system has a number of weapons to choose from to accommodate a specific style of play that will feel familiar to the person playing MH. This is not a money pit - the developers have provided a number of ways to play the game and I think there is a fair balance (after all, you have to feed your family). It's a pretty straight time/money trade-off. My experience is also that the community is not a bunch of twits. Of course they are out there but if you get to a good corps you will find more people than willing to help with hunting and advice. All told, however, the game has been fickle on my iPad Pro when it comes to network interfaces. I put a ticket on this but I'm informing you that sometimes you can't get a fix because you can't log in. Normally, this is anything, but there were times when there was a time-limited event and we couldn't log the game. It's still a good game and fun play. I love the little game about which I was able to play it. First, based on the suggestions of other reviews, you need to allow the ability to run a little startup cinematic before skipping or to glitch/freeze your ability to log in. I've only played the game for a few days and it gets harder to load and play every day. Yesterday it took at least five minutes for the movie to load and at first I thought the game was corrupted. Today when I finally try to log me past the initialization, the game says that it can't log me in due to a bad internet connection, but I log in to discover that my internet connection runs without any problems. I closed and tried again to find that I get a connection error in the initialization step so I eventually tried to delete the download game again without luck. I couldn't find anywhere that the game was in maintenance, which was my first thought. I couldn't see the notice when I played yesterday. Update: Whenever the game has a major update, I have to play on wi-fi data instead and I need to reset my router. It's a little annoying but it's a minor issue to deal with for a good game.
